FestPac 2016

In 2016, Guam will host the Festival of the Pacific Arts, a regional festival showcasing the diversity of arts and performances from over two dozen island nations and territories throughout the Pacific. The Festival of the Pacific Arts, or FestPac as it is known on Guam, originated from an effort to preserve and develop local art forms and to celebrate and share cultural heritage. It also provided a means of passing on traditional and cultural knowledge from one generation to the next.

The first festival was held in Fiji in 1972, and has hosted from a different island every four years. Guam sent a delegation to the most recent 7th Festival in 2012 in the Solomon Islands, which had over 2,500 participants from 24 different islands including Palau, Fiji, Hawaii and American Samoa. The 2016 festival will be the first time Guam will host this prestigious event.

Marana Leon Guerrero Llujan (1914-2006) was one of a cadre of dedicated educators who began teaching during the United States Naval Era (1898-1941). Before the World War II, she taught at the Guam Post Office, Leong School and Pedro Palomo school. After the war she became the principal of Yona Elementary School, Chalan Pago Elementary School, Price Elementary School and Talote Elementary School. A lifelong educator, Marana Llujan retired after 41 years of dedicated service. In recognition of her and her husband’s contribution to the island the Yona Elementary School was renamed “Manuel L. In recognition of her service to the Catholic Church she was awarded a Papal Award in 1960 by Bishop Apolinar W. Baumgartner.
